Slow Down, Sami!

“Everyone, please give me your homework,” said Mr Goff.

Sami groaned. “I was in such a hurry that I left it on my bed.”

Mr Goff shook his head. “Not again, Sami! That’s the third time this week. You need to slow down.”

On Saturday, Sami's cousin, Fara, asked him to help in the garden. Sami raced outside. He did not see Fara's cat curled by the door.

CRASH!

He knocked into a flowerpot which smashed into pieces.

"Sorry, Fara," said Sami. "Everyone is always telling me to slow down."

"Maybe I can help," said Fara gently.

“Nothing special is happening,” he sighed.

“Try again tomorrow. It might take some time,” said Dad. The next day, Sami sat down again to watch the flowerpot. He jiggled his arm. He shook his leg. Sami was not used to sitting still. But the flowerpot stayed as it was.

Today, many people keep animals as pets. If you have a pet, you have to look after it. However, did you know that some animals can look after their owners too?

Guide dogs

The best-known animal helpers are probably guide dogs. They help people who are blind or who cannot see well. Every year in the UK, 850 guide dogs start their jobs after training for over 12 months.

Guide dogs help their owners to walk safely by making sure they do not bump into things or step into the road. The best guide dogs have to be obedient so they are easier to train. They also have to be friendly.

Guide horses

Guide dogs are not suitable for everyone who is blind or cannot see well. Some people are allergic to dogs or frightened of them. Luckily, other animals, such as miniature horses, can help. A miniature horse is a type of horse that is quite small. People can't use normal-sized horses because they are too big to go in their houses.
